IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

Unknown Parties, et al.,
Plaintiffs,
v.
Jeh Johnson, et al.,
Defendants.

No. CV 15-00250-TUC-DCB

ORDER

Plaintiffs are three civil immigration detainees who are or were confined in a U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) detention facility within the Tucson Sector of the U.S. Border Patrol. Defendants are Jeh Johnson, Secretary of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS); R. Gill Kerlikowske, CBP Commissioner; Michael J. Fisher, CBP Chief; Jeffrey Self, Commander of the Arizona Joint Field Command of CBP; and Manuel Padilla, Jr., Chief Patrol Agent for the U.S. Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector. All Defendants are named in their official capacities. Pending before the Court is Plaintiffs’ Motion for Class Certification (Doc. 4).¹ The Motion is fully briefed. (Docs. 41, 42.) For the reasons stated below, the Court will grant the Motion and will certify the proposed class.

¹ Plaintiffs have requested oral argument. Because the Court will grant Plaintiffs’ Motion and will require supplemental briefing as set forth in this Order, the Court does not find oral argument called for at this time.

1 I. Background

2 CBP has eight border patrol stations located in its Tucson Sector, which includes 3 Cochise, Pima, Pinal, and Santa Cruz Counties in Arizona. These eight stations are 4 located in Why, Casa Grande, Tucson, Nogales, Wilcox, Sonoita, Bisbee, and Douglas, 5 Arizona.² In 2013 and 2014, CBP's Tucson Sector apprehended more than 200,000
6 individuals. (Doc. 4 at 7, citing U.S. Border Patrol's 2013 and 2014 annual reports.)
7 According to Plaintiffs, tens of thousands of individuals apprehended annually are 8 detained in holding cells in multiple Tucson Sector detention facilities. (Id.)

9 Plaintiffs filed this action in June 2015, raising six claims for relief related to the 10 treatment of Tucson Sector civil immigration detainees. (Doc. 1.) Plaintiffs' first five 11 claims stem from Defendants' alleged violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth 12 Amendment based on their subjection of detainees to deprivation of sleep, deprivation of 13 hygienic and sanitary conditions, deprivation of adequate medical screening and care, 14 deprivation of adequate food and water, and deprivation of warmth. (Doc. 1 ¶¶ 184-218.) 15 Plaintiffs' sixth claim stems from Defendants' alleged violation of the Administrative 16 Procedures Act (APA) based on their failure to enforce their own procedures related to 17 the operation of holding cells in Tucson Sector facilities. (Id. ¶¶ 219-24.)

18 Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief, including an Order compelling 19 Defendants to provide Plaintiffs and the proposed class with beds and bedding; access to 20 soap, toothbrushes, toothpaste, and other sanitary supplies; clean drinking water and 21 nutritious meals; constitutionally adequate cell occupancy rates, temperature control, and 22 fire, health, and safety standards; medical, dental, and mental health screening; and 23 emergency medical care. (Id. ¶¶ 230-35.) Plaintiffs also request Court-ordered 24 monitoring as appropriate. (Id. ¶ 236.) The proposed Class definition is "all individuals 25 who are now or in the future will be detained for one or more nights at a CBP facility, 26 including Border Patrol facilities, within the Border Patrol's Tucson Sector." (Doc. 4

27
28 ² See <http://www.cbp.gov/border-security/along-us-borders/border-patrol-sectors/tucson-sector-arizona> (last visited October 30, 2015).

1 at 6). The proposed Class representatives are Plaintiffs Jane Doe #1 and Jane Doe #2, 2 who are currently confined in the Tucson Border Patrol Station in Tucson, Arizona 3 (Doc. 1 ¶¶ 15, 35), and Norlan Flores, a 34-year-old Nicaraguan native residing in 4 Tucson, who has twice been detained in a holding cell in the Tucson Border Patrol 5 Station. (Id. ¶ 52.)

6 II. Governing Standard

7 The Court's authority to certify a class action is found in Federal Rule of Civil 8 Procedure 23. Plaintiffs first bear the burden of establishing the four requirements 9 articulated in Rule 23(a): (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is 10 impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims 11 or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; 12 and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the 13 class. Additionally, Plaintiffs must establish one of the requirements found in Rule 23(b).
14 In this case, Plaintiffs allege that class certification is appropriate pursuant to Rule 15 23(b)(2), which requires a demonstration that "the party opposing the class has acted or 16 refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or 17 corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R.
18 Civ. P. 23(b)(2).

19 When analyzing whether class certification is appropriate, the Court must conduct 20 "a rigorous analysis" to ensure that "the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied." 21 Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 2551-52 (2011) (citing Gen. Tel. Co. of 22 the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982)). As discussed below, the Court finds that 23 certification of the Class is appropriate.

24 III. Rule 23(a) Analysis

25 A. Numerosity

26 Plaintiffs assert that the Border Patrol apprehends and detains tens of thousands of 27 individuals in its Tucson Sector facilities annually. (Doc. 4 at 12.) They point to 28 evidence that in the six-month period from January 1, 2013 to June 1, 2013, more than 1 70,000 individuals were detained in Tucson Sector facilities, with close to 60,000—or 2 more than 80 percent—being held in detention for 24 hours or more. (Id.; Cantor Decl., 3 Doc. 1-6 at 4-5, ¶¶ 6, 10.) Given these volumes, Plaintiffs argue that the number of 4 individuals who meet the proposed class definition is in the many thousands. (Doc. 4 5 at 12.) Defendants do not dispute that the numerosity requirement is satisfied. Indeed, 6 there is no doubt that joinder of all members of the potential Class would be 7 impracticable, if not impossible. See Sepulveda v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 237 F.R.D.

8 229, 242 (C.D. Cal. 2006) (acknowledging that joinder will be impracticable for very 9 large classes). The Court finds the numerosity requirement satisfied.

10 B. Commonality

11 1. Governing Standard

12 To establish commonality, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that there are “questions of 13 law or fact common to the class.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2). Plaintiffs need not 14 demonstrate that all questions are common to the class; rather, class claims must “depend 15 upon a common contention . . . [that is] capable of classwide resolution.” Dukes, 131 S.
16 Ct. at 2551. “Even a single [common] question” will suffice to satisfy Rule 23(a). Id. at 17 2556 (citation omitted). In the civil rights context, commonality is satisfied “where the 18 lawsuit challenges a system-wide practice or policy that affects all of the putative class 19 members.” Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 868 (9th Cir. 2001).

20 In assessing commonality, “it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the 21 pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question.” Gen’l. Tel. Co. of Sw. v.
22 Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160 (1982) (“[T]he class determination generally involves 23 considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff’s 24 cause of action.”) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). That said, although 25 the Court must consider the underlying merits of Plaintiffs’ claims to ascertain whether 26 commonality exists, it is not the Court’s function at this juncture to “go so far . . . as to 27 judge the validity of these claims.” USW v. ConocoPhillips Co., 593 F.3d 802, 808-09 28 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 954 (9th Cir. 2003)). Thus,

1 Plaintiffs’ motion for class certification is not an opportunity to hold “a dress rehearsal
2 for the trial on the merits.” Messner v. Northshore Univ. HealthSystem, 669 F.3d 802, 3 811 (7th Cir. 2012).

4 2. Analysis

5 Plaintiffs maintain that all members of the proposed class share a “common core 6 of salient facts” and challenge the same “policies and practices that exist in all Border 7 Patrol Stations” that detain individuals in the Tucson Sector. (Doc. 4 at 14.) As a result, 8 they claim, all putative class members also present common questions of law. (Id.)
9 These include whether Defendants’ alleged policies and practices result in the deprivation 10 of Plaintiffs’ and putative class members’ rights to humane treatment in violation of the 11 Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause and the APA, including (1) the right to sleep, 12 (2) the right to hygienic and sanitary conditions, (3) the right to adequate medical care, 13 (4) the right to adequate food and water, and (5) the right to warmth. (Id. at 14-15.)

14 Defendants argue that the Court should reject class certification due to lack of 15 commonality in this case. They first argue that Plaintiffs fail to show commonality as a 16 matter of law because the class certification cases upon which they rely—Hernandez v.
17 County. of Monterey, 305 F.R.D. 132 (N.D. Cal. 2015); Gray v. County. of Riverside, No.
18 EDCV 13-00444-VAP (OPx), 2014 WL 5304915 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 2, 2014); and Brown v.
19 Plata, 131 S. Ct. 1910 (2011)—do not apply in this context. (Doc. 41 at 10; see Doc. 4 at 20 15.) This is because, Defendants argue, these cases deal only with specific conditions of 21 confinement, not the variety of conditions presented by Plaintiffs, and they apply to the 22 treatment of criminal detainees under the Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual 23 punishment standard, not the treatment of civil immigration detainees under the Fifth 24 Amendment due process standard put forth in this action. (Doc. 41 at 9-12.)

25 This argument is misplaced. As relevant here, the above cases all involve alleged 26 system-wide conditions of confinement. The Complaint in Hernandez, like the instant 27 Complaint, challenged a variety of allegedly unconstitutional conditions: in that case, 28 lack of safety, inadequate medical and mental health care, and improper accommodations

1 for disabled inmates. 305 F.R.D. at 141-43. In upholding commonality, the court in 2 Hernandez found that claims of “systemic deficiencies . . . have long been brought in the 3 form of class action lawsuits” and that apart from such litigation “it is unlikely that . . .
4 conditions that violate the Eighth Amendment could ever be corrected by legal action.”
5 Id. at 157-58. The court in Gray similarly certified a class based on alleged system-wide
6 deficiencies in inmate medical and mental health care in five county jails. 2014 WL
7 5304915, at *2, *33-34. Additionally, the Supreme Court in Plata affirmed classwide 8 relief, including phased-in population reductions, for inmates with serious mental or 9 medical conditions based on the California Prison System’s alleged system-wide failures 10 to deliver adequate care for those classes of inmates. 131 S. Ct. at 1926, 1939-47.

11 Defendants appear to claim that these cases are inapposite because they involve 12 fewer facilities and less varied issues and inmates than are presented here. (Doc. 41 13 at 10). They argue that “[i]n contrast” to these cases, “Plaintiffs here challenge a number 14 of different conditions they allege were experienced by a variety of individuals during 15 immigration processing over an unspecified period of time at eight different Border 16 Patrol stations throughout the Tucson Sector.” (Id.) It is not clear, however, how 17 Defendants believe such generalized factual differences make the above cases inapt.
18 Moreover, Defendants fail meaningfully to distinguish the nature of the issues related to 19 the various conditions of confinement in these cases from the inhumane conditions of 20 confinement Plaintiffs allege exist for those held overnight in all Tucson Sector Border 21 Patrol facilities.

22 Absent substantial differences between the factual and legal nature of these cases 23 and the factual and legal nature of Plaintiffs’ claims, Defendants argument that the Court 24 should find a lack of commonality appears to rest merely on their assertion that the body
25 of law upon which Plaintiffs rely pertains to criminal rather than civil detainees and arises 26 under an Eighth Amendment, not a Fifth Amendment, standard. (Id.) But such a finding 27 would lead to the absurd result that only criminal detainees, not civil detainees, could 28 ever litigate system-wide conditions of confinement as a class. For purposes of 1 commonality the operative question is not whether the same detention status and same 2 legal standard applies as applies in other analogous class action cases. Rather, the 3 question is whether the putative class members, themselves, present a common 4 contention that “is capable of classwide resolution,” meaning “determination of its truth 5 or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in 6 one stroke.” Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. 131 S. Ct. at 2545.

7 Here, Plaintiffs contend that all putative class members are subject to the same 8 conditions in which they are denied basic necessities such as bedding, food, water, and 9 adequate health care in violation of the Due Process Clause and the APA. (Doc. 1 ¶¶ 89-10 175, 184-224.) In support, they provide numerous declarations in which putative class 11 members attest to being subjected to frigid temperatures, overcrowding, lack of beds and 12 blankets, constant illumination, and lack of adequate food, water, health care, and 13 sanitary supplies. (Doc. 4 at 7-10; Doc. 2. Exs. 1-6.) Defendants fail to show why 14 Plaintiffs’ contentions, if proven, would be incapable of classwide resolution in the 15 immigration detention context. Indeed, to the extent that Defendants appear to argue that 16 commonality cannot be met simply because “no case clearly establishes a legal standard 17 for Fifth Amendment due process challenges in this context” (Doc. 11 at 20), this 18 argument is self-defeating. The question of what standard applies to the treatment of 19 civil immigration detainees is, itself, a question capable of—indeed, suited to—classwide 20 resolution.

21 Likewise, the question of whether Defendants have violated the applicable legal 22 standard with respect to the treatment of immigration detainees held overnight in Tucson 23 Sector Border Patrol facilities unquestionably lends itself to classwide resolution.
24 Classwide proceedings would determine, for instance, whether an injunction directing 25 Defendants to remedy any alleged unconstitutional conditions, such as the lack of beds 26 and blankets or the lack of health care screening, is an appropriate response. As the 27 Supreme Court has found, commonality is satisfied not merely where classwide 28 proceedings are capable of presenting common questions of fact and law, but where they

1 are capable of “generat[ing] common answers apt to drive the resolution of the 2 litigation.” Dukes, 131 S. Ct. at 2551(emphasis in original, internal citation and quotation 3 marks omitted). Based on Plaintiffs’ common set of allegations supported by the 4 numerous declarations discussed above, Plaintiffs have shown sufficient commonality of 5 claims to meet these purposes.

6 Defendants also argue that the Court should reject commonality because 7 “Plaintiffs have failed to identify any specific policy or practice to which all members of 8 the class were subjected.” (Doc. 41 at 13) (emphasis in original.) Defendants maintain 9 that although Plaintiffs use the term “policy and practice,” they fail to point to any 10 particular policies that form the basis of their claims, and their assertion of 11 unconstitutional practices “is based on the varying allegations of 53 individuals regarding 12 their different individual experiences . . . not on any uniformly applied policy.” (Id.) 13 This argument also fails for a number of reasons.

14 First, Plaintiffs need not demonstrate that all class members have been or will be 15 subjected to identical harms. Even if specific injuries among members of the proposed 16 class differ, “commonality is satisfied where the lawsuit challenges a system-wide 17 practice or policy that affects all of the putative class members.” Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 18 868 (internal citations omitted). Plaintiffs maintain that “all individuals detained for one 19 or more nights in Defendants’ custody are necessarily subjected to the same conditions 20 because of Defendants’ practice of placing detainees in overnight hold rooms that 21 Defendants admit are ‘not designed for long-term care and detention.’” (Doc 42 at 12, 22 quoting Padilla Decl. Doc. 39-1 at 4 ¶ 11.) Where system-wide conditions such as those 23 presented here underlie the various alleged harms, “individual factual differences among 24 the individual litigants or groups of litigants will not preclude a finding of commonality.”
25 Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 868.

26 Defendants nonetheless focus on just such individual factual differences. They 27 emphasize, for example, that individual immigration detainees are held for different 28 lengths of time, at different hours, and at different Border Patrol stations in the Tucson

1 Sector. (Doc. 41 at 14-15; id. n. 6.) In addition, they argue that putative class members 2 are likely to experience different conditions based on variables such as age, immigration 3 history, criminal history, location of apprehension and processing, and the availability of 4 beds at U.S. Immigration and Custom Enforcement (ICE) or Office of Refugee 5 Resettlement (ORR) facilities, where they may otherwise be sent. (Doc. 41 at 14.) Other 6 more generalized factors that Defendants argue can affect conditions include a surge of 7 apprehensions in a given day, the outbreak of a communicable disease, or the presence of 8 criminal aliens at a particular location. (Id.) For these reasons, Defendants argue, 9 whether putative class members' due process rights have been or will be violated requires 10 individualized analyses and cannot be determined on a classwide basis. (Id. at 14-15.) 11 Defendants point to Padilla's declaration which shows that the time individuals spend in 12 Tucson Border Patrol facilities varies based on available transportation to and available 13 bed space at ICE or other facilities. (Doc. 39-1 at 4 ¶ 11.) The same declaration also 14 shows that individuals may be placed in separate hold rooms based on factors such as 15 gender, age, and family groups, where feasible. (Id. ¶ 12.)

16 These stated variations are, in fact, irrelevant to the commonality determination 17 because Plaintiffs do not seek to assert classwide claims based on the length of individual 18 detentions, the placement or grouping of individual detainees, or other personalized 19 factors. Instead, their claims are based on alleged Sector-wide conditions of confinement 20 that they claim all overnight detainees are subjected to in all Tucson-Sector Border Patrol 21 locations. (See, e.g., Doc. 1 ¶¶ 1, 79, 81-83, 87-88.) Defendants make no claims that the 22 factors at issue in the Complaint, such as the lack of beds and blankets, food, water, 23 health care, and other basic necessities, vary by facility. Nor do they claim that basic 24 provisions are otherwise meted out differently for different detainees based on the time, 25 place, or reason for their detention or any other individualized considerations. The 26 differences in length of confinement, location, and other incidentals Defendants would 27 have the Court focus on are therefore merely a distraction from the underlying 28 commonality of Plaintiffs' due process and APA claims.

1 Second, Defendants’ argument that commonality does not exist because Plaintiffs 2 have not identified any policies underlying their claims relies on an overly narrow 3 interpretation of the Ninth Circuit’s opinion in Parsons v. Ryan, 754 F.3d 657 (9th Cir.
4 2014). As Defendants note (Doc. 41 at 12-13.), the Ninth Circuit in Parsons affirmed 5 commonality where the district court had identified ten statewide Arizona Department of 6 Corrections (ADC) policies to which all members of the putative class were subject. 754 7 F.3d at 678. Crucial to the court’s finding was that, although the precise injuries of 8 putative class members would necessarily differ, “every inmate suffers exactly the same 9 constitutional injury when he is exposed to a single statewide ADC policy or practice that 10 creates a substantial risk of serious harm.” Id. The court reasoned that “[w]hat all 11 members of the putative class . . . have in common is their alleged exposure, as a result of 12 specified statewide ADC policies and practices that govern the overall conditions of 13 health care services and confinement, to a substantial risk of serious future harm.” (Id.)

14 Defendants would have the Court distinguish the instant case from Parsons, 15 purportedly because Plaintiffs have not identified any official policies to which all 16 immigration detainees in the proposed class are subject. (Doc. 41 at 12-14.) As already 17 noted, however, Plaintiffs allege and put forth affidavit evidence to support that all 18 members of the proposed class are subject to the same set of overall conditions while 19 detained in Tucson-sector hold cells, including cold temperatures, lack of beds and 20 blankets, and lack of adequate food, water, hygiene supplies and other provisions.
21 Plaintiffs allege, in particular, that Plaintiffs’ counsel has interviewed more than 75 22 individuals who, collectively, were detained in all eight Tucson Sector CBP facilities at 23 various times in 2014 and 2015, and that “the descriptions of the holding cells by the 24 former detainees are consistent with” all of the various inhumane conditions Plaintiffs 25 allege. (Doc. 1 ¶¶ 87-88.) Thus, the same considerations of common exposure to harm 26 created by overall conditions of confinement that led to class certification in Parsons are 27 present here.

28

1 Finally, it is not the case, as Defendants appear to argue, that class certification is 2 only appropriate where Plaintiffs can identify specific stated policies that violate the 3 rights of putative class members. A policy, practice, or custom may be inferred from 4 widespread practices or evidence of repeated constitutional violations for which the 5 errant officials are not reprimanded. Menotti v. City of Seattle, 409 F.3d 1113, 1147 (9th 6 Cir. 2005) (citing Nadell v. Las Vegas Metro. Police Dep't., 268 F.3d 924, 929 (9th Cir.
7 2001)).

8 In Parsons, the plaintiff class claimed in part that “despite ADC stated policies, 9 the actual provision of health care in its prison complexes suffers from systemic 10 deficiencies that rise to the level of [a constitutional violation].” 289 F.R.D. 513, 521 11 (D. Ariz. 2013) aff'd, 754 F.3d 657 (9th Cir. 2014). Similarly, in this case, Plaintiffs 12 claim that a number of actual, systemic deficiencies in all Tucson-Sector Border Patrol 13 facilities violate the rights of all putative class members. Moreover, Plaintiffs have 14 provided sufficient affidavit evidence from putative class members to plausibly support 15 each of the asserted deficiencies. As already discussed, claims involving overall 16 conditions that affect the rights of all putative class members are sufficient to satisfy 17 commonality. Whether such conditions result from Defendants’ stated policies or from 18 their alleged failure to create or adhere to those policies does not change the commonality 19 analysis. The Court finds the commonality requirement satisfied.

20 C. Typicality

21 “The commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a) tend to merge.” Wal- 22 Mart, 131 S. Ct. at 2551 n. 5 (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158-59). In Armstrong, the 23 Ninth Circuit explained that “named plaintiffs’ injuries [need not] be identical with those 24 of the other class members, only that the unnamed class members have injuries similar to 25 those of the named plaintiffs, and that the injuries result from the same, injurious course 26 of conduct.” Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 869.

27 Defendants argue that Plaintiff Flores, in particular, should be dismissed because 28 he was not confined at a CBP facility at the time Plaintiffs filed the Complaint on June 8,

1 2015, and he therefore lacks standing to sue. (Doc. 41 at 16 n. 7.) Defendants maintain 2 that although Flores claims to fear being detained by Border Patrol in the future, he has 3 not shown that any such future detention is “reasonably likely to occur.” (Id.)

4 This argument is unfounded because the proposed class definition includes all 5 individuals “who are now or in the future will be detained for one or more nights at a 6 CBP facility . . . within the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector” (Doc. 4 at 6), and the 7 allegations in the Complaint support that Flores was previously and may again be so 8 detained. The Complaint alleges that Flores was taken to a Tucson Sector Border Patrol 9 Station after a minor traffic violation on August 10, 2014, and was held for 10 approximately 36 hours. (Doc. 1 at 12 ¶¶ 56.) While in custody, Flores allegedly 11 presented documentation that he was represented by immigration counsel, but he was 12 denied contact with his attorney. (Id. at 13 ¶ 63.) The Complaint further alleges that, due 13 to a backlog in issuing Visas, Flores has not yet received his U Nonimmigrant Visa, and 14 he believes he could be detained by Border Patrol again. (Id. at 14 ¶ 64.) For purposes of 15 standing, Flores’s previous 36 hour detention without contact with counsel after a minor 16 traffic violation, coupled with his indeterminate wait for his approved Visa is sufficient to 17 show an “actual or imminent invasion of a legally protected interest.” Lujan v. Defs. of 18 Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992); c.f. Pickern v. Holiday Quality Foods Inc., 293 F.3d 1133, 19 1138 (9th Cir. 2002) (“[A] plaintiff who is threatened with harm in the future because of 20 existing or imminently threatened non-compliance with the ADA suffers ‘imminent 21 injury.’”).

22 Defendants additionally argue, as to all named Plaintiffs, that the same factual 23 variations already set forth to show a lack of commonality defeat typicality. (Doc. 41 at 24 15.) This argument also lacks merit. As already discussed, Defendants have not shown 25 that variations in such factors as length of stay or facility location have any discernable 26 bearing on the overall conditions that Plaintiffs assert affect all overnight detainees in 27 Tucson-Sector Border Patrol facilities.

28

1 Defendants also argue against typicality because they contend that some putative 2 class members may never experience the specific deprivations Plaintiffs allege, but will,
3 instead, receive food, water, showers, and mattresses under the Border Patrol policies 4 described in Padilla's declaration. (See id. at 16; Doc. 39-1 at 6 ¶¶ 15-16.) This 5 argument goes to the merits of Plaintiffs' claims, however, and does not establish the 6 existence of any individually-based distinctions between the alleged treatment of named 7 Plaintiffs in Tucson-Sector Border Patrol hold cells and the overall conditions of 8 confinement that Plaintiffs allege impact all overnight detainees.

9 Defendants posit further possible distinctions between class members that they 10 argue undercut typicality, noting, for instance, that a criminal detainee may be held 11 shackled and locked in isolation while an unaccompanied minor would be placed with 12 others in a hold cell with an open door. (Doc. 41 at 16.) These purported distinctions are 13 also just a distraction, however, from Plaintiffs' contentions of specific constitutionally-14 deficient conditions of confinement that apply to all overnight detainees, and they do not 15 speak to whether the experiences of the named Plaintiffs typify those of the proposed 16 class. Here, the named Plaintiffs are either currently housed in or have been housed for at 17 least one night in Tucson-Sector Border Patrol facilities and face the threat of repeated 18 detention. The named Plaintiffs have therefore experienced the same overall conditions 19 of confinement that Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged are common to all Tucson-Sector 20 Border Patrol facilities. The Court finds the typicality requirement satisfied.

21 D. Adequacy of Representation

22 Finally, Rule 23(a)(4) requires that class representatives fairly and adequately 23 represent the interests of the entire class. "This factor requires: (1) that the proposed 24 representative Plaintiffs do not have conflicts of interest with the proposed class, and (2) 25 that Plaintiffs are represented by qualified and competent counsel." Dukes v. Wal-Mart 26 Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 614 (9th Cir. 2010) rev'd on other grounds by 131 S. Ct. 2541.
27 For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds the adequacy of representation 28 requirement is also satisfied.

1 Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 957 (9th Cir. 2003) (recognizing that, “[u]nder [Rule 23(a)’s 2 permissive standards,” plaintiffs are not required to offer a class representative for each 3 type of discrimination claim alleged (quoting Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 4 1020 (9th Cir. 1998)). Moreover, as to medical care, in particular, the Ninth Circuit 5 found in Parsons that systemic deficiencies affect even those who have not or will not 6 experience specific medical needs. 754 F.3d 679 (9th Cir. 2014) (citing Plata, 131 S. Ct.
7 at 1940) (Noting that, “[a]s Justice Kennedy explained in Plata, inadequate health care in 8 a prison system endangers every inmate.”). Here, too, Plaintiffs allege an overall lack of 9 medical care and screening. (See, e.g., Doc. 1 at ¶¶ 1, 27-30, 127-135.) In addition, they 10 allege that Flores was housed with other detainees who were vomiting or suffering from 11 diarrhea but did not receive any medical attention. (Doc. 1 at 13 ¶ 62.) Under such 12 circumstances, the Court does not find that a lack of individual medical ailments while in 13 CBP custody makes the named Plaintiffs unsuitable to represent the asserted due process 14 right to medical care of the class.

15 It is also not the case, as Defendants argue, that the named Plaintiffs have failed to 16 allege some form of harm. Plaintiffs allege in the Complaint that “[t]he inhumane and 17 dangerous conditions in the Tucson Sector facilities result in irreparable, ongoing 18 physical and psychological harm to Plaintiffs and putative class members and serious risk 19 of future harm.” (Doc. 1 at 5 ¶ 10.) Defendants appear to argue that this allegation does 20 not apply to named Plaintiffs because they have not alleged specific physical and 21 psychological injuries. A partial sampling of allegations shows, however, that each of the 22 named Plaintiffs allegedly endured cold temperatures with minimal clothing, lack of beds 23 or bedding, loss of sleep, lack of proper hygienic supplies, lack of medical screening, 24 constant illumination, and little food or water while in CBP custody. (See Doc. 1 ¶¶ 21-25 29, 40-49, 53, 56-62.) These allegations are sufficient to show that the named Plaintiffs 26 suffered harms typical of the class and that their interests in challenging CBP’s 27 conditions of confinement align with the interests of the class as a whole. Adequacy of 28 representation is satisfied as to the class representatives.

2. Plaintiffs' Counsel

1 Plaintiffs are represented by the ACLU Foundation of Arizona, the American 2 Immigration Council, the National Immigration Law Center, the Lawyers' Committee for 3 Civil Rights of the San Francisco Bay Area, and Morrison & Forester LLP. Collectively, 4 counsel has successfully litigated a number of class action cases regarding the rights of 5 immigrants and conditions of confinement. (Doc. 4 at 19; see Docs. 1-1, -2, -3, -4, -5.)
6 Defendants do not challenge the adequacy of representation in this case. (Doc. 41 at 17 7 n. 8.) The Court finds that Plaintiffs are represented by qualified and competent counsel.
8 Adequacy of representation is satisfied.

10 IV. Rule 23(b)(2)

11 Plaintiffs are also charged with satisfying one of the requirements in Rule 23(b), 12 which applies when "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds 13 that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding 14 declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P.
15 23(b)(2). In this case, Plaintiffs allege that Rule 23(b)(2) is met because they allege 16 unconstitutional conditions of confinement stemming from systemic policies and 17 practices. (Doc. 4 at 20.)

18 Defendants again argue that "Plaintiffs do not challenge a single policy applying 19 to all facilities, but rather various practices amongst the facilities." (Doc. 41 at 18.) As 20 already discussed, this argument ignores the systemic nature of the conditions alleged in 21 Plaintiffs' Complaint. As noted, Plaintiffs allege and provide declaration evidence to 22 support that each of the due process and APA violations they assert commonly occur at 23 all Tucson-Sector CBP facilities. It matters little to this analysis whether such conditions 24 result from identified policies or from the absence or violation of such policies or even 25 whether every putative class member experiences every alleged harm. For purposes of 26 Rule 23(b)(2), what matters is that a pattern of alleged violations can be remedied for all 27 putative class members by the same form of injunctive relief. As the Ninth Circuit 28 explained in Walters v. Reno:

1 [a]lthough common issues must predominate for class
2 certification under Rule 23(b)(3), no such requirement exists
3 under 23(b)(2). It is sufficient if class members complain of a 4 pattern or practice that is generally applicable to the class as a 5 whole. Even if some class members have not been injured by the challenged practice, a class may nevertheless be appropriate.

6 145 F.3d 1032, 1047 (9th Cir. 1998) (citing 7A Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & 7 Mary Kay Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure § 1775 (2d ed. 1986)).

8 Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief stemming from allegedly unconstitutional 9 conditions of confinement are the quintessential type of claims that Rule 23(b)(2) was 10 meant to address. As discussed above, the claims of systemic deficiencies in CBP's 11 detention facilities apply to all putative class members. Further, while the Court is 12 cognizant that any proposed injunction must also meet Rule 65(d)'s specificity 13 requirement, the Court does not find that Plaintiffs have crafted their requests for 14 injunctive relief "at a stratospheric level of abstraction." Shook v. Bd. of County
15 Comm'rs, 543 F.3d 597, 604 (10th Cir. 2008). Instead, Plaintiffs specifically request 16 injunctive relief for alleged unconstitutional conditions, acts, or omissions that affect all 17 individuals who are detained for at least one night in CBP Tucson Sector facilities.
18 (Doc. 1 at 53-54 ¶ 228.) They seek, as a minimum, the provision of basic necessities, 19 such as beds and bedding; access to soap, toothpaste, and other hygienic and sanitary 20 supplies; clean drinking water and healthy food; medical screening and emergency 21 medical care; and uniform enforcement of health and safety standards. (Id. at 54 ¶¶ 229-22 335.) Thus, the remedies Plaintiffs seek would not lie in providing specific care or 23 provisions to specific inmates as Defendants appear to assert. Rather, the conditions of 24 confinement would be raised for all inmates, and, if successful, a proposed injunction 25 would prescribe "a standard of conduct applicable to all class members." Shook, 543 26 F.3d at 605.

27 Plaintiff's outline of injunctive relief in their Complaint is sufficient at this stage 28 to meet Rule 23(b)(2)'s requirements.

1 V. Class Definition

2 Defendants argue that the proposed class definition does not meet the standard that 3 “[a] class definition should be ‘precise, objective, and presently ascertainable.’” 4 O’Connor v. Boeing N. Am., Inc., 184 F.R.D. 311, 319 (C.D. Cal. 1988) (quoting Manual 5 for Complex Litigation, Third § 30.14, at 217 (1995)). (Doc. 41 at 4). Specifically, they 6 argue that Plaintiffs’ proposed class definition is unclear as to (1) what facilities are 7 included, (2) what is meant by “detained,” and (3) what is meant by spending a “night” in 8 one of the included facilities. (Id. at 4-8.). The Court will address each of these 9 objections in turn.

10 A. Applicable Facilities

11 Defendants maintain that it is unclear what facilities are included in the phrase “a 12 CBP facility, including Border Patrol facilities, within the Border Patrol’s Tucson 13 Sector.” (Id. at 5.) They note that, in addition to the eight Border Patrol stations in the 14 Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector, CBP has ports of entry (POEs) along the Arizona/Mexico
15 border that are operated by a different office of CBP from Border Patrol, and the POEs 16 are not within the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector. These facts make clear, and Plaintiffs 17 agree (see Doc. 42 at 8, 8 n. 1), that POEs are necessarily excluded from the proposed 18 class definition because they are not part of the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector.
19 Defendants argue nonetheless that the phrase “a CBP facility, including Border Patrol 20 facilities, within the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector” suggests that Plaintiffs intend to 21 include more than just the eight Border Patrol stations in the Tucson Sector, and it is 22 unclear what other facilities, if not POEs, the proposed definition would encompass.
23 (Doc. 41 at 5.)

24 The Court agrees that this phrase is problematic. As Defendants argue, the clause 25 “including Border Patrol facilities” raises questions about what facilities the class 26 definition is intended to encompass besides the eight Border Patrol stations thereby 27 indicated. Besides adding potential confusion, this clause is unnecessary. Because CBP 28 is the Border Patrol’s parent agency, the term “a CBP facility” necessarily includes any

1 and all Border Patrol facilities in the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector, and there is no need 2 to restate this. For these reasons, the Court will modify the proposed class definition to 3 eliminate the clause “including Border Patrol facilities.” Absent this clause, the class
4 definition still pertains to the eight Border Patrol stations within the Border Patrol’s 5 Tucson Sector that form the locus of Plaintiffs’ Complaint. (See Doc. 1 ¶ 87) (The more 6 than 75 individuals interviewed by Plaintiffs’ counsel had collectively been confined in 7 all eight Tucson Sector Border Patrol stations). The modified definition also still allows 8 the pending class action to apply uniformly—particularly with respect to Plaintiffs’ 9 prayers for system-wide injunctive relief—in the event CBP or the Border Patrol utilizes 10 any additional CBP facilities besides the existing eight Border Patrol Stations to detain 11 individuals in the Border Patrol’s Tucson Sector.

12 B. The Meaning of “Detained”

13 Defendants argue that the proposed class definition lacks precision about what it 14 means for an individual to be “detained” in the context of Border Patrol operations.
15 (Doc. 41 at 6.) Defendants acknowledge that individuals apprehended by Border Patrol 16 are “in custody” from the time they are apprehended in the field and brought to a Border 17 Patrol station for processing until they are released, removed, or transferred. (Doc. 41 18 at 6.) Defendants maintain, however, that Border Patrol custody is unique and variable 19 because some individuals may receive medical treatment or meet with consular officials 20 during this time, the length of custody varies based on factors determined during 21 processing but is intended to be brief, and “Border Patrol stations are not designed for 22 long-term care and detention as that term is ordinarily understood.” (Id.) For these 23 reasons, Defendants argue, “detention” is not appropriate to describe the short-term 24 period of custody that occurs at Border Patrol stations. (Id.)

25 Defendants once again rely on distinctions that confuse the real issue. Even if, as 26 they assert, Border Patrol custody is impacted by a number of variables and is relatively 27 short term, this does not mean that it is not custody just the same. Nor does it mean that 28 those “in custody” for at least the one-night minimum period the class definition covers

1 are not “detained.” Plaintiffs assert that the common meaning of the word “detain” is “to 2 hold or keep in or as if in custody.” (Doc. 42 at 8, quoting Mirian Webster Dictionary,
3 http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/detain.) They further quote from CBP’s 4 own guidelines which refer to “the short term custody of persons . . . detained in hold 5 rooms in Border Patrol stations.” (Doc. 42 at 8, quoting U.S. Border Patrol Policy
6 Memorandum, “Hold Rooms and Short Term Custody,” Doc. 26-1 at 5) (emphasis 7 added.) Thus, CBP, itself, recognizes custody as detention, at least where such custody 8 involves placement in hold rooms, which is a unifying factor in the allegations 9 throughout the Complaint.

10 The Court concludes, for purposes of this action, that the word “detained” equates 11 to an individual being in Border Patrol custody and thereby lacking the freedom to leave.
12 This is in keeping with the ordinary definition of the word “detained,” and, when looked 13 at in conjunction with the other parameters of the proposed class definition, is precise 14 enough to ascertain whether an individual is a member of the proposed class.

15 C. Meaning of “For One or More Nights”

16 Defendants argue that the phrase “for one or more nights” lacks clarity in the 17 context of Border Patrol operations because individuals are brought in and out of Border 18 Patrol facilities at all hours. (Doc. 41 at 7.) They posit a number of scenarios in which 19 different types of individuals who are apprehended and processed at different times of the 20 day or night have very different experiences. These individuals may include an 21 unaccompanied minor picked up at 7:00 p.m., then transferred to the Tucson
22 Coordination Center at 9:00 p.m., and then transferred to ORR custody at 11:30 p.m.; a 23 criminal alien picked up with drugs in his possession at 1:00 a.m., then held in isolation
24 at the Nogales Station, and then transferred to Tucson for prosecution at 5:00 a.m.; or a 25 pregnant woman picked up at 11:00 p.m., then taken to the Casa Grande Station, and then 26 transferred to a local medical care center at 2:00 a.m. (Id.) Defendants argue that 27 whether any of these individuals would come under Plaintiffs’ proposed class definition 28

1 is unclear because Plaintiffs do not provide clarity about what constitutes the beginning
2 or end of the “night.” (Id. at 6-7.)

3 Plaintiffs respond that this part of the proposed class definition is not ambiguous 4 because other courts have certified classes based on “overnight” detention. (Doc. 42 at 9, 5 citing cases.) They also argue that “‘overnight,’ is commonly understood to mean 6 ‘during the night,’ or ‘of, lasting, or staying the night.’” (Id., quoting Mirian Webster
7 Dictionary, <http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/overnight>.) Plaintiffs maintain 8 that it is clear that Defendants’ scenarios would not satisfy this definition because each of 9 those examples “pertains to detention lasting for only a portion of the night.” (Doc. 42 10 at 9.)

11 The Court agrees with Plaintiffs that being detained for “one or more nights” is 12 commonly understood to involve a stay of at least one night. Nonetheless, the Court 13 agrees with Defendants that such an understanding is not sufficient here, where 14 individuals are brought in and out of detention at all hours, and where there is no 15 additional common understanding of when, exactly, a night begins and ends. Even if, as 16 Plaintiffs assert, Defendants’ proposed scenarios are too short to constitute more than just 17 a “portion of the night,” it is not clear how many hours would tip the scales into an 18 “overnight” stay or just what would satisfy the intent of Plaintiff’s proposed class 19 definition.

20 The cases upon which Plaintiffs rely to show that “overnight,” as it is commonly 21 understood, is adequate are inapposite because in Brown v. City of Detroit, the district 22 court certified a class consisting of those detained by the Detroit Police Department 23 “overnight or for more than sixteen hours in a 24-hour period.” No. 10-12162, 2012 WL
24 4470433, at *19 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 27, 2012). Thus, the class definition in Brown 25 included parameters beyond the common understanding of “overnight” that would 26 resolve when even a daytime or partial-night detention would qualify. Similarly, in Dunn 27 v. City of Chicago, the class was defined in relevant part as “[a]ll persons held in a[n] . . .
28 interrogation or interview room for more than sixteen hours in a 24-hour period.” 231

1 F.R.D. 367, 370 (N.D. Ill. 2005) amended on reconsideration, No. 04 C 6804, 2005 WL
2 3299391 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 30, 2005). Plaintiffs proposed class definition lacks this added
3 clarity. This deficiency is particularly important, where, as here, the temporal parameters 4 of confinement are inherently tied to the relief sought on behalf of the class, such as the 5 provision of beds, bedding, and various hygiene supplies. For this reason, the Court 6 cannot sua sponte modify the proposed class definition without inserting itself into the 7 role of Plaintiffs in framing the precise circumstances they believe call for such relief.

8 Despite this issue, the Court does not find that a more precise definition of what it 9 means to be detained “for one or more nights” is required before it can certify the 10 proposed class as defined in this Order, provided Plaintiffs file an amended class 11 definition more exactly defining “for one or more nights.”

12 The Court will therefore certify the class as set forth below, but will require 13 Plaintiffs to file an amended definition better describing “one or more nights,” and the 14 Court will thereafter finalize the class definition, unless the Defendants object to the 15 amended class definition.

16 Accordingly,

17 IT ORDERED:

18 (1) Plaintiffs’ Motion for Class Certification (Doc. 4) is granted.

19 (2) The following Class is certified under Rule 23(b)(2):

20 All individuals who are now or in the future will be detained 21 for one or more nights at a CBP facility within the Border 22 Patrol’s Tucson Sector.

23 (3) The Class is certified as to Defendants’ alleged violations under the Fifth 24 Amendment Due Process Clause and the APA of the following asserted rights:

- 25 (a) The right to sleep,
26 (b) The right to hygienic and sanitary conditions, 27 (c) The right to adequate medical care, 28 (d) The right to adequate food and water, and
